Course Scope

MILH201 provides a foundation for the study of military history and thought, and affords the student an understanding of the interplay of forces that have shaped the present, as well as providing the student with the means of viewing current problems against the long perspective of how men have handled similar problems in the past. Students will learn about the nature of history as a discipline, military history as a branch of that discipline, the uses of military history, how to study the history of war, and some suggestions on what to read. By the end of the course, students should have a solid understanding of military history and the historians who made this discipline valid.

Course Objectives

1. Elaborate on the nature of history as an academic discipline.

2. Explain military history as a branch of history.

3. Describe the uses of military history.

4. Suggest some methods of reading and studying military history.

5. Demonstrate an understanding of military history through written and oral assignments.

6. Define history; learn the basic process for historical research; and conduct research on topics related the content of this course.

7. Identify, read, and critique primary and secondary sources, to include the benefits and biases of each type of source, and use the Chicago / Turabian style of documentation in written assignments.

8. Complete short and long papers on specific historical periods to include mastery of major ideas, significant events, and historical changes.

9. Discuss historical issues, respond to study questions, and reflect on historical themes as presented in the context of the time period and their relevance today.

Course Delivery Method

This course is delivered via distance learning and enables students to complete academic work in a flexible manner, completely online. APUS ensures that the proper course materials and access to an online learning management system are available to you.

In online courses, we construct knowledge not just by completing readings and assignments. An important part of the process is communicating with classmates and learning from what they have to say. As such, we need to share online conversations about ideas.
STUDENT WARNING: This course syllabus is from a previous semester archive and serves only as a preparatory reference. Please use this syllabus as a reference only until the professor opens the classroom and you have access to the updated course syllabus. Please do NOT purchase any books or start any work based on this syllabus; this syllabus may NOT be the one that your individual instructor uses for a course that has not yet started. Direct interaction is a key feature of the educational experience. For that reason, it is important that you interact with fellow students and the course instructor during the course as specified in this syllabus. Additionally, you can contact the instructor during posted office hours.

You are expected to submit classroom assignments by the posted due date and to complete the course according to the published class schedule. As adults, students, and working professionals we understand you must manage competing demands on your time. Should you need additional time to complete an assignment please contact the faculty before the due date so you can discuss the situation and determine an acceptable resolution. Routine submission of late assignments is unacceptable and may result in points deducted from your final course grade.

See Course Materials section for on Course Policies for late assignments.

CITATION AND REFERENCE STYLE
Assignments completed in a narrative essay or composition format must follow the accepted guidelines of the American historical profession, which is the Chicago Manual of Style. This course will require students to use the citation and reference style established by Kate Turabian in A Manual for Writers of Term Papers, Theses, and Dissertations, 6th ed. (Chicago, IL: University of Chicago Press, 1996), which is the most readily available distillation of the Chicago Manual of Style.

The Chicago Manual of Style for book-length works and its Turabian offshoot for research papers have long been the standard across all fields of study, as well as much of the publishing industry. These texts cover the layout and production gamut--including rules for chapter headings and subheadings, abbreviations, alphabetizing non-English names, and table design / designation.

1. Front matter--e.g., title page, copyright statement, dedication, table of contents, lists of illustrations or tables, acknowledgements, abstract.
2. Narrative with scholarly attributions.

NETIQUETTE
Online universities promote the advance of knowledge through positive and constructive debate--both inside and outside the classroom. Discussions on the Internet, however, can occasionally degenerate into needless insults and “flaming.” Such activity and the loss of good manners are not acceptable in a university setting--basic academic rules of good behavior and proper “Netiquette” must persist. Remember that you are in a place for the fun and excitement of learning that does not include descent to personal attacks, or student attempts to stifle the discussion of others.

the ultimate reference for answers to questions about administrative and academic policies and procedures. APUS students do not have to wait for our offices to be open in order to find the information they need to succeed. No matter what location or time zone our students are in, they can consult the online Student Handbook with any questions about financial aid, tuition assistance and refunds, registration, drop/withdrawal or extensions, the University System's grading system, and the electronic classroom. The handbook also covers issues related to various student services, academic guidance, and each student’s rights and responsibilities. Of course, there may be a unique question that requires additional information outside that is covered in the handbook. APUS students should use the contact information listed online inside their campus to contact the APUS staff with any additional questions. See Student Handbook.
